

From: Loren Williams
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 11/16/01 10:46pm
Subject: Antitrust Settlement

To Whom it may Concern,

The recent settlement with Microsoft is terribly inadequate. It has been clearly shown that Microsoft has cost the public BILLIONS of dollars through the abuse of its monopolization of the desktop. While that may not be enough to justify splitting up the company, this money was extorted from all companies, households, and government offices that use Windows. If the goal of the DOJ is to do uphold justice, Microsoft should be made to give back the money that it has unlawfully taken. Letting Microsoft get away with the current restrictions is like catching a burglar red handed and sending him to his getaway car, loot still in hand, with an admonition not to do it again. It is, in short, a cruel mockery of the concept of justice. I urge you to reconsider the case while there is still time.

Regards,

Loren P. Williams
Student, UCSB
loren.williams@lycos.com